Financial service providers require their customers to routinely update their records as a matter of basic good financial practice. This up-to-date contact record enables your service provider to communicate to you about important matters associated with your account.

At a minimum, you should provide:

- Current cell phone number
- Current mailing address (post office box)
- Email address that you check regularly
- Current residential address and permanent address information

To safeguard your financial assets from being deemed unclaimed:

- Check your statements regularly
- Promptly notify your bank/brokerage firm/ insurance provider about changes in your contacts (phone, email & postal address)
- Regularly transact on the account
- Routinely check with your bank/brokerage firm or insurance provider on the status of paid out dividends/ premiums
- Officially advise your financial service provider about your next of kin
